In the recent publications of Sheldon Pollock and Stewart Gordon recurrent aspect which is emerging in the academic debates is Asian dominance over world in the pre-colonial era. The Asia which dominated the world and encouraged diverse cultural and multi ethnic communications among different sub-regions within itself. What were these connections and how the different populations were responding to these connections? What were the patterns of demographic movements and their impacts in the sub-regions of Asia? Through the talk we will be exploring about these different questions and their relevance in the dynamics of Asia.
